Biggest Tuna Ever On A HALCO?

Double Trouble Below

This unusual shot was sent into the Halco boys recently from the Dampier Archipelago where the fish get big, fast and competition for a feed is a serious business.

Shown below is a small Spanish Mackerel and a juvenile Red Emperor taken on a Scorpion 150STD in R7 Green Fluoro colours at the same time.

H78 Red Neck Fires Up

There is always excitement in the Halco camp when they launch a new colour, waiting for the first impressions from the press and fishermen in general is hard on the development team. Peter Swanson or Swano to his mates was quick off the mark and tried the new H78 Red Neck colour out on a family trip to Proserpine recently. Although the weather was not too kind to the family they did manage a few trips outside when the winds died off a little.

Casting around the little Laser Pro120 on light gear, Swano's Red Neck got monstered at the boat by a ripper of a Giant Trevally which proceeded to tow him and the boat around for quite a while before landing the fish.

For a lot of years now, the guys at Halco have put a lot of faith in the R15 Pink Chrome colour. It has been available in almost all their blue water models since the colours release some eight years ago.

Earlier this year, world class angler, photographer and all round good guy, Al McGlashan took a trip to our most southern state, Tasmania, for a spot of tuna trolling and came up trumps in the end.

Despite atrocious weather conditions at the time, Al and his mates boated a Southern Bluefin Tuna of giant proportions. The 103Kg fish literally inhaled a Laser Pro 190DD in the R15 Chrome Pink colour and is the largest tuna to date taken on a Halco that the boys are aware of. If you know of a bigger tuna taken on a Halco, they would certainly love to hear from you.
